Headwinds is the story of a man living 'on the lower cheek of the world where the tears fall and turn to ice' who is simultaneously muser and maverick.

Lindsay Pope's combination of the domestic and the wild, of fables and personal disclosures, has created a beguiling first collection.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR:

Lindsay Pope was born in Dunedin and lives in Nelson. His poetry has appeared in publications and online literary journals, in New Zealand and overseas.

Headwinds is his first book of poetry.

*You felt its force
a westerly blast
determined to plunder
the grace from petrel's wings.*

*You leant into this mouth
of biting spray
gnawing up old razorback
sharp as broken bone.*

*This old reprobate of storm
angry with ominous roar
conversed with you most fluently.*

Wild, your eyes; such power.
